The elegant sports coupé from the famous Italian brand Lancia, launched on the market in the second half of the 1960s, achieved remarkable commercial success in several countries. Its attractive styling, noteworthy performance, and excellent value for money were the main factors behind its success. It became one of the most famous and sought-after Italian cars of the period, also thanks to the adoption of innovative technological solutions for its time. Over the years, both the design and the engine range evolved, including the adoption of a 1,300 cc narrow-angle V4 front longitudinal engine producing 87 HP, combined with front-wheel drive, capable of delivering excellent driving performance. Compact dimensions were matched by outstanding space utilization, also providing good interior comfort and habitability. From the road-going version, the legendary Lancia Fulvia HF was derived.
